It's so easy! Browser of another era may not realize they're out of date, but modern ones are great at browsing. At my work, we have a great-old-browser for legacy purposes, and the most useful part is the ability to search the sites, because if you can get the words you're looking for on the page, you can browse more conveniently. So YouTube, Wikipedia, whatever. Most browsers let you search for search engines. This is great, because if you're actively searching something, you can find a page that contains the text you're looking for. Most browsers have a "Go to your favicon", which opens a bit of webpage with your favicon. This lets you bookmark and open more conveniently, and it's useful when you're doing some specific task and you have to use the browser. So you don't have to search for your favicon, but you still can search for it to get to its page. Most browsers have local storage or session storage. This allows you to save you current session in the browser so that you don't have to set up anything (and because your browser shuts down) to be able to access it later. So let's say you get to a certain page and you are supposed to learn something. As you go, you remember the name of the page, the name of the link there. So you can look into your session storage later to find the information 09e8f5149f
