Neuropathic pain is a major clinical problem and the incidence of chronic neuropathic pain is estimated at 300 per 100,000 individuals. Neuropathic pain associated with cancer and diabetes has a negative impact on the quality of life and survival. It is still unknown whether the common Persian spice crocin can be used to treat such pain. In this study, we investigated whether crocin would be effective as a novel therapy for neuropathic pain in the experimental animal model. In our study, treatment of neuropathic pain by oral administration of crocin (10 and 20 mg/kg/day) was examined in the sciatic nerve ligation model of neuropathic pain in the rats. We observed that the dosage of 20 mg/kg was found to be more effective in the treatment of neuropathic pain with a significant reduction of mechanical and thermal hypersensitivity. Biochemical assay of the malondialdehyde (MDA) levels and decrease in the activity of superoxide dismutase (SOD) levels showed that crocin induced an antioxidant effect. It also showed antinociceptive and antioxidant effects in a dose-dependent manner. A significant increase in the levels of several cytokines, including tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF- $\alpha$ ), interleukin-1 $\beta$  (IL-1 $\beta$ ) and interle
