very distinct varieties (from the southern extension of the Cape, through Namaqualand in Namibia, to the Dolomite areas of southeast Austria and the Czech Republic). The one phylogenetic consensus across all attempts to synthesize molecular and morphological data is that subgenus Orthilia forms a monophyletic clade which is most closely related to O. latipennis, though the degree of support for this position is low, and the subgenera remain generally widely disjunct (for example the clade sister to Orthilia is the monotypic subgenus Neorthilia, with two described species, N. phrygialis and N. nicoleae, being recognized as distinct subclades). The two species of Neorthilia as described, i.e., N. nicoleae and N. phrygialis, appear to be polyphyletic, and the position of Neorthilia as sister to Orthilia, according to the analyses, is not well-supported. DNA analysis suggests that several of the numerous Orthilia species are more closely related to one another than to any other member of their subgenus. The subgenus Orthilia also has several species which are difficult to place phylogenetically, and may require a re-assessment. This may be due to incomplete and biased sampling, or the possibility that there are cryptic species not yet found. As in the case of Orthilia itself, various subgenera in the Orthiliinae may also be paraphyletic. Finally, a number of Orthilia species seem to have undergone species-group-specific losses of some of their morphological features, for example, in the caudal and anal fins, although these patterns are often hard to detect and may have occurred many times during the evolutionary history of Orthilia. Etymology The subgenus is named Orthilia after the Greek goddess of right measure, who was known for being responsible for the fair distribution of humans and animals, and also the mother of the twins Dionysus and Arion. This choice of goddess was intended to symbolize the almost complete ecological overlap of the species in the subgenus. Q: BigDecimal padding, general questions What padding is in BigDecimal? Does anyone know the formula to get the length of the content of a BigDecimal after padding? I know for arrays it is length * 4, but how do I do it for BigDecimal. My output should look like this: input: 123456 result: 12345 A: BigDecimal can store as little as 128 bits of precision, so some of the precision will be lost in string representation. To get the precision of the BigDecimal, call.precision(). So for example, 123456.123456 will result in 123456. But 123456.123456 will result in 123456.123455. BigDecimal is a fixed size binary type, so it's not a variable length type like an array. A: The only padding I can think of is digitsToPadding. This is somewhat undocumented, but it is generated by BigDecimal.decode(). See the comments on the API. Clinical and functional profile of personality disorders in association with epilepsy in a tertiary care centre in India. In a tertiary care centre in India, we evaluated the profile and clinical presentation of personality disorders (PDs) in the context of epilepsy in a sample of patients. We evaluated prospective patients who were screened and diagnosed according to DSM-IV criteria for PDs, and we separately evaluated PDs according to ICD-10 classifications. The intensity of psychopathology was assessed using the Young Mania Rating Scale, Hamilton Anxiety Scale, and Hamilton Depression Scale. The Mini International Neuropsychiatric Interview (MINI) was used for the diagnosis of comorbid psychiatric disorders. We assessed the duration of epilepsy and number of seizures. Quality of life was assessed using the World Health Organization Quality of Life (WHOQOL-BREF) questionnaire. A total of 812 patients were studied for sociodemographic data, seizures, and psychiatric comorbidities; PDs were present in 28% of the patients (PD-I, 14%; PD-II, 10%; and PD-NOS, 4%). Patients with PDs had significantly greater disability (WHOQOL-BREF scores; $P = 0.008$) and more frequent depression ($P = 0.035$) and anxiety ($P = 0.001$) symptoms. Patients with PD-NOS had the highest
