the mark with the last generation of social media," explains Susanne Wojcicki, co-founder of YouTube. She says she was convinced that one day Kim Kardashian would get her own social media juggernaut, and she's right. A series of recent consumer surveys suggests Canadians share the passion for selfies as much as their love of Facebook and Twitter. Half of those polled say they like to take selfies. A third says they see themselves as "self-sovereign," meaning they control their own image. And more than one in three say they do it to provoke a reaction. Selfies also dominate Pinterest, the online bulletin board
