I am creating a new Android App in Android studio. I need to run the emulator but it isn't shown up when I create a new project. I am using Google Nexus 4 with Android API 10 as the main version. I do not have the Virtual Device Manager installed as Android Studio warns that this tool is missing. How can I run the emulator to test it? A: In Android Studio, you must create a Virtual Device using the Android SDK tools, in order to use the API version you choose. This tool is launched from the SDK tools window, and from your SDK Platform-tools folder: Click on the SDK tools folder, and then on the SDK Platform tools folder. You can see two version of emulator in the first tab: You can set the emulator you want to launch. In your case, it is the default emulator (if you don't use an actual device). You need to launch the emulator with your desired API version and with your SDK path: In your SDK path, to launch the emulator, you have to add the path of your SDK tools folder: Antiviral factor (AVF) or IFN-gamma-inducing factor (IGIF) is a recently discovered antiviral protein. It exerts its antiviral action by inducing interferon (IFN) production and the antiviral activity of IFN. Furthermore, it exhibits potent antiviral activity against the viruses, herpes simplex virus (HSV), vaccinia virus, Sendai virus and Venezuelan equine encephalitis virus (VEE). The protein is highly immunogenic and induces antibodies in mice and in rabbits. The antiviral spectrum of IGIF is broader than the parent IFN since other cells and viruses are also susceptible. The protein has been cloned and sequenced by Verma et al. in the Journal of Biological Chemistry, 264, 8 6d1f23a050
