The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have announced the arrest of a 43-year-old Saudi, identified only as Ahmad, and a 41-year-old Jordanian, who they say is Hashem Khader, on December 14. Police say the two men made "explosive devices" while in British Columbia. Authorities say that the Saudi was in Canada to support Al-Qaeda at the time of his arrest. Al-Qaeda is the imam of the mosque in Richmond, British Columbia, which is under increased surveillance after it hosted a sermon from a radical preacher last year. The imam of the mosque, however, denied ever meeting the preacher. The mosque has been the subject of multiple intelligence and surveillance operations by Canadian and British security services since 2008, when it was revealed that an imam of a mosque in Toronto was raising funds for and training militants who traveled to Afghanistan to fight the US occupation. According to Canadian security officials, the mosque, which does not have an official name or registered charity status, hosted talks by radical preacher Mohammed
